

Well advised with UVC air disinfection

Munich law firm counts on better safety through improved air hygiene

The international law firm SOLEOS is located in the heart of Munich, right on the Viktualienmarkt . For more than ten years, the law firm has been supporting its clients with advice and action. In recent times, of course, it has also been helping with questions related to coping with the economic consequences of the global pandemic.

"No one was prepared for Corona, including us," states Dr. Bernhard Gimple, one of the two founders of the law firm. The epidemic quickly and radically created new situations for everyone, for business and politics, not least for lawyers and their clients. It was precisely the initial helplessness with which people faced the virus that caused a kind of paralysis in society, the consequences of which we will feel for a long time to come.

In addition to people's health, it is precisely this abrupt economic and social standstill that must be avoided at all costs in the future. Because the lawyer is certain of one point: "We will have to learn to live with Corona and we must be prepared for other comparable impacts." After all, experts are already warning that new epidemics can, and most likely will, occur in the foreseeable future.

For SOLEOS this means planning sustainably, including in terms of infection protection. That is why the lawyers have purchased UVC air disinfection devices for the law firm, which are used in the reception area and in the conference room. After all, with SARS-CoV-2 the aerosols in the room air are the most productive source of infection, so air sterilizers are the best precaution against infection.

The choice quickly fell on the SteriWhite Air Q from the Bavarian company Dr. Hönle AG, and it was the right one, as Stefan Neuenhahn, the other founding partner of the law firm, emphasizes. The UVC sterilizer works highly effectively and yet so quietly that you hardly notice it: "If there is absolute quiet in the office (no conversations between colleagues in the corridor, no telephones) then you can hear a very quiet rustling of the fans. In addition, the chic design fits well into the modern premises.

"We see the purchase of air disinfection devices not only as a simple hygiene measure, but also as a service for employees and clients," Neuenhahn explains the lawyers' decision. Because everyone felt visibly more comfortable because of the additional security - and confirmed what he quickly noticed himself: "The air feels somehow fresher."

With the SteriWhite Air Q, the lawyers gave themselves and their employees and clients a great gift for the tenth anniversary of the law firm: greater safety and well-being at work. And although the air sterilizer will always hum quietly to itself from now on in order to help prevent infections, SOLEOS is happy about the currently low incidences and the possibility of being able to celebrate the law firm's anniversary together in a traditional way.
